Excerpt: .no need of inserting in the act that the commission should reconvey to the city. The learned counsel for the respondents admits that an equity of redemption reposed in the city. When therefore the debt should become paid, the new city hall would be absolutely the property of the city. There appears upon the brief of respondents this assertion: In many cases, where commissioners, not being incorporated, have issued bonds, the courts have held that the city was liable, as the statutes properly construed required a holding that such unincorporated commissioners were simply agents of the city. We can see no reason why an incorporated commission may not act as an agent or trustee just as well. An examination of the various sections of the legislative act reveals the fact that the commission was to be but the humble trustee of the city of...
