Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: . . . the gates of Purgatorio, Milton has here in return placed St. Peter in company with Apollo, Triton, and c. , and that for the intrusion respecting the clergy of his time the earliest Italians have set plentiful example. See for instance St. Peters animadversions upon the degeneracy of his successors in ParaMso, Canto 27, which closely resembles the present passage. Dante does not however make Cato the keeper of the gates (that office being given to an angel, Purgat. ix. 78, 105), but the guardian of certain wandering spirits outside the place itself. For the charge of irreverence urged against Milton for his alleged confusion of things sacred and profane see Introduction, p. 22, The pilot of the Galilean lake; Two massy keys he bore of metals twain--The golden opes, the iron shuts amain. He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespake: no 109 Pilot is...
