If these words of Puvisde Chavannes be true, then we know that one of the secrets of Pennell s art lies in his power of selection. And this bears out a statement made by him that he seemed to have the faculty of choosing an advantageous position from which to make his drawing. If I mistake not, he said that this faculty had been his, early in life, and he often wondered if some day it would desert him. But if he really fears its loss, his fears are groundless, because it is the mental position he chooses, not the merely physical; because, in short, he is Pennell. THE WOOLWORTH BUILDING From the etching by JOSEPH PENNELL in the Brooklyn Museum Is there nothing but despair then, for those who must work and work and work; who must inquire with...
