Bagley, The Apperception of the Spoken Sentence, Amer. Journ. Psych. , xii. , 1900, 80 ff. , esp. 126. The admission made in the text has, of course, its obverse side; Stouts observers would, in all probability, have an anti-sensationalistic bias. Bagley, as a matter of fact, recognises the possibility of an effective apperception when the only discriminable contents of consciousness are verbal ideas (117), and also when the associated imagery is inconsistent with the meaning of the sentence (121). Taylor (Zeits. , xl. , 1905, 228) brings this latter result into connection with Marbes conclusions: he himself (239) adduces evidence of the irrelevant visual associates to which I have referred in Lecture I. The marginal theory of meaning, which Bagley develops briefly in Amer. Journ. Psych, and more elaborately in The Educative Process, 1905, gives a consistently sensationalistic account of certain Bewusstseinslagen (Taylor, 248), which seems to fit the observed facts. That it has not been discussed by recent workers in the field of attitude may be ascribed, perhaps, to the difference of material: Bagley worked with auditory, the rest for the most part with visual stimuli. It is further possible that pattern and composition of the attitude vary even with variation of the experimental method, as employed upon the same sort of material: cf. Watt, 367 f. 2 G. E. Miiller and F. Schumann, Ueber die psychol. Grundlagen der Vergleichung gehobener Gewichte, Arch. f. d. ges....
